SILVERTHORNE, Colo. – Walking up to the front door of the Summit County Parade of Home’s “Buffalo House,” visitors are aware of the attention to detail put into this home as they notice the pathway and Aspen tree design etched into the glass in the front door of the home.

This door and the home’s wine cellar door, in a design of hanging grapes, was LASER etched by Enduring Images, a Lakewood, Colo.-based company specializing in customization technologies for a variety of materials, including porcelain, ceramic, granite, marble, wood, leather, and glass.

“We take our client’s vision and turn it into an enduring piece for their home or business,” said Mary Beth Manwiller, CEO of Enduring Images. The company uses a 4 foot by 5 foot LASER bed to create photos on very large pieces such as the doors for the Buffalo House. Manwiller explains that the images are photo quality, 300 dpi; a much greater resolution than traditional sand blasting techniques.

“The glasswork is beautiful,” said Manwiller. “Fortunately, with this technology, and our equipment, we aren’t limited to just doors and windows; we can also etch granite and leather to make lasting products.”

While the Summit County Parade of Homes features Enduring Images’ LASER technology, the company also holds exclusive rights in the US to a patented digital process for printing with ceramic chemistry. Enduring Images is able to create ceramic tile murals for both interior and exterior spaces including lobbies, shower installations, back splashes and outdoor facilities. With the ceramics technology, they are even able to create custom dinnerware for clients.

“We can help people create completely personal pieces at reasonable costs without requiring minimum quantity orders,” said Manwiller. Restaurants and individuals who want to have their own design or logo featured on dinnerware find the Enduring Image products to be a quick and easy way to personalize their dining experience.

Enduring Images was founded in 2003 and today stands as a leader in digital and ceramic imaging for commercial and residential clients.
