COLORADO COMPANY CREATES ENDURING IMAGES

Company's Unique Technologies Create The Ultimate in Customization

LAKEWOOD, Colo. – Have you ever seen a four foot by five foot LASER bed use one of your own images to create a mountain ski scene on a European shower door? Or etch a vintage photo on a glass or wooden wine cellar door? Or create a western scene on a leather couch?

Have you ever wondered how and where indoor and outdoor custom tile murals were created?

Mary Beth Manwiller, founder and CEO of Colorado-based Enduring Images, hopes to show you how it's done.

“In our factory, we’ve got a LASER bed capable of etching large images on a variety of surfaces,” said Manwiller. She explains that the images are photo quality, 300 dpi; a much greater resolution than traditional sand blasting techniques. Her glass products have been featured at the 2006 Summit County Parade of Homes and are showcased at several upscale bath and designer glass showrooms in Colorado.

“With our technologies, we are able to help people create unique, and enduring images on many different types of materials using either the customer’s art or our own,” said Manwiller. Their digital ceramic imaging technology allows Enduring Images to create ceramic tile murals, for both interior and exterior spaces including lobbies, shower installations, back splashes and outdoor facilities. A six foot example of a tile mural can be seen at the DGI showroom at 1600 West Evans.

“Using this same imaging technology, we also create custom tableware for residential and commercial customers,” said Manwiller. Enduring Images is able to offer personalized tableware at a reasonable cost and without minimum quantity orders. This product is ideal for restaurants, private clubs and individuals wanting to make their special event or everyday table top truly unique.

Enduring Images invites you to visit their facility, see their LASER in action, and see for yourself why this three-year-old company today stands as a leader in LASER and digital ceramic imaging for commercial and residential clients.
